Have we answered the question on detection limits? A sampling plan could possibly be a moot point if everyone feels the detection limits are too high to be of use. I was left with the impression the locals and the State folks were going to weigh in on that issue before hand. I assume you have not heard from them. In the meantime, it would be helpful if our contractors could be looking to see if other methods with lower detection limits are even available.

Have the monitoring results remained consistently at zero?
